"To succeed in life, we must give life" Eglantyne Jebb 1876-1928

Eglantyne Jebb, co-founder of Save the Children did not "give life" in the traditional way by becoming a mother but instead dedicated her life to children's welfare and human rights and permanently changed the way the world acts towards children.

At once a romantic and realist, Eglantyne's short life (she died aged just 52) was full of humour and tragedy, passion and pain. She moved from illicit romance in Cambridge to espionage in Serbia, from private spiritualism in Shropshire to public arrest in Trafalgar Square, rubbing elbows with such notables as George Bernard Shaw, John Maynard Keynes, and Pope Benedict XV. And while children's universal human rights are yet to be realised, Eglantyne's achievement of putting them on the world agenda is a powerful testament to her rare combination of personal courage, eccentric charisma, and humane vision.

Clare Mulley joined Save the Children as a corporate fundraiser in the 1990s and is now an author and mother of three young daughters. She is the winner of the Daily Mail Biographers' Club prize 2007.

The Woman Who Saved the Children by Clare Mulley is published by Oneworld Publications in hardback on the 24th April 2009 priced £18.99. www.claremulley.com
